

Cyberbullying: advice for parents and carers

All bullying hurts – especially if you have learning difficulties like me. I was constantly being bullied and picked on and got some really upsetting messages from people at my school. I didn't really know what to do when it happened cos my mum doesn't know much about MSN. But once I told her she helped me sort things out and see that I didn't have to put up with it.

The Anti-Bullying Alliance (ABA) is committed to stopping bullying in all its forms. In November each year, ABA runs a high-profile Anti-Bullying Week to raise awareness and provide support for schools and local authorities to respond to and prevent bullying. The theme for this year's campaign is cyberbullying – bullying that occurs via mobile phone or the internet. Parents worry about bullying; it is often difficult to know what to do if you notice signs that your child may be being affected by the bullying actions of others, or even if you suspect your child is involved in bullying someone else.

With increasing numbers of primary age children using social networking sites and getting their first mobile phone, it is really important that those closest to children and young people are able to help and support them. They also need to make sure they learn how to use this technology safely and responsibly as their behaviours are still forming.

Signs of bullying

You may be unsure if your child is being bullied. If you suspect that this may be happening, look out for the following signs. You may see one or more signs, for example your child could:

- show signs of stress – being moody, silent or crying, or bullying a younger sibling or friend
- make excuses to miss school, such as stomach complaints or headaches (or your child may be skipping school altogether)
- seem upset after using the internet or mobile, or change their behaviour – for example, no longer wanting to look at new text messages immediately – and be secretive and unwilling to talk about their online activities and phone use
- be withdrawn in their behaviour
- have more bruises or scrapes than usual

- change their eating habits
- have torn clothes, school things that are broken or missing, or have 'lost' money
- sleep badly
- be wetting the bed.

There could be other reasons for these signs, so you need to ask yourself:

- Could there be anything else bothering your child?
- Could there be changes in your family life like a new baby, or divorce or separation that may be affecting your child's behaviour?

When a child is the target of cyberbullying, they can feel alone and misunderstood. It is therefore vital that, as a parent or carer, you know how to support your child if they are caught up in cyberbullying. The tips overleaf may help.

Preventing cyberbullying

- Be aware of what cyberbullying is and how it can happen by reading more in 'Cyberbullying: A whole-school community issue' at <http://www.digizen.org/cyberbullying/overview/>
- Agree on family rules and procedures about what to do if someone is being cyberbullied, such as saving the message or text as evidence and telling a trusted adult.
- With your children, explore the online technologies and websites they like to use.
- Become your child's 'friend' on Facebook or MSN. Have your child show you, or learn together, how to block someone on a chat service like MSN or how to report abuse to a website or service provider.
- Encourage positive use of technology by helping your child to use it to support learning, socialise with peers and explore the wider world. Discuss and promote 'netiquette' – responsible online behaviour – and reward your child for this. Tell them this means:
 - respect others online – treat them how you would want to be treated
 - only post or write things online and in text messages that you'd be happy for anyone to see
 - use appropriate language when chatting or playing games online
 - pay close attention to a website's terms and conditions and make sure you're old enough to be using a site or online service.
- Support your child in making responsible decisions on the internet and when using a mobile phone – make sure they are aware of the types of photos and other content that are appropriate to post online (e.g. no photos in a school blazer or sports uniform).
- Be aware that as well as being at risk, your child could also be involved in cyberbullying. Be alert to changes in your child's behaviour – especially after using the internet or their mobile phone. Discuss the emotional impact of bullying on another person.
- Encourage your children to keep passwords safe. Treat your password like your toothbrush – don't share it with anyone!

Responding to cyberbullying

- Support and encourage your child if they tell you they've been cyberbullied – reassure them that it's not their fault and that they've made the right choice by reporting it to you. Tell them that bullying is not acceptable and inform them of what you will do next by following the tips below.
- Make sure your child does not retaliate or reply to cyberbullying messages of any kind.
- Help your child to save evidence of cyberbullying. Use online tools or the 'print screen' button on your computer and don't delete text messages on a mobile phone.
- If you need to, you can help your child to change their contact details (email, online username, mobile phone number) to prevent further bullying. Denying them access to the technologies is not the answer.
- Use the security tools on your family's computer, on websites or on your child's mobile phone.
- Report cyberbullying. You can report the incident to your child's school, the website or service provider, and, in serious cases, the police.
